

Olivier Avaro

An International Executive, Olivier Avaro has 18 years of business experience with multimedia telecommunications and software companies across the globe. Prior to his role as Vice-President Applications in Amdocs Cloud Services, he founded Streamezzo, a spin-off company of Orange in 2004, held executive positions of Vice-President Strategic Marketing and Vice-President Business Development and lead the company as CEO to a successful acquisition by Amdocs in 2010.

During his earlier career, Olivier hold several research and development activities across Europe in France Telecom R&D on video analysis and compression, in Deutsche Telekom, where he initiated and led several international projects from enhanced broadcasting systems with rich interactivity to multimedia teleconferencing systems and in Orange, where he served as Chief Technical Officer of the R&D department of hyper language and multimedia dialogues. Starting 1995, he led the MPEG Systems standardization committee, a group who pioneered important industry standards such of the MP4 File Format as well as the MPEG-4 BIFS and LAsER standards for Rich Media services.

Olivier holds his master degree in telecommunication engineering from the French “Grande Ecole” Telecom Bretagne.